Soc. 109 Introduction to Race and Ethnicity
Spring 2002

Dr. Lakshmi Srinivas
Office: PNE 333
Office hours: Thursdays 12-1 and by appointment
Class meets: Mon., Thurs, 1:30-2:40. PNE 349.

Course objectives:

This class will introduce sociological approaches to the study of race and ethnicity. The first few weeks will focus on selected issues and debates. Later in the semester we will explore immigration and ethnicity. The strength of the sociological approach is its emphasis on the study of social phenomena within broad social and historical contexts. Sociology has been preoccupied with the study of social change, with the human search for meaning, understanding, community and order. Sociological studies of ethnicity and race has to do with how people see themselves and others, how social and historical forces shape their meaning-making and actions. Our larger objective in this class is to develop a sociological eye and to analyze and think critically about the issues at hand. To that end we will discuss theory and method and engage with a variety of materials including visual materials.

Required texts and readings:

Books are available in college bookstore (you can always purchase books online at Barnes and Noble.com, Amazon.com or used books at very reasonable prices through half.com. They will be mailed to you directly).
